Operating Protocol:

The most important element of a college is instruction. The general institutional standard of quality exists so that all concerned will have a clear idea of the aims and requirements of the course and methods of evaluation. Improvement in the quality of the instructional programs of the college is ongoing.

The methods of instruction must relate to the objectives of each course and the capabilities of the students. Different grades will be awarded for different levels of student performance. Quality performance is encouraged by awarding higher grades.

The Chief Academic Officer, in partnership with the Academic Deans, is responsible to ensure that instructional standards are ongoing at all campuses and sites.
